

INSTITUTE FOR THE STUDY OF GLOBAL ANTISEMITISM AND POLICY

The background of the entire page is a grayscale photograph of a building. The top section shows a brick wall. Below it, a large gothic archway is visible, with a stone crest or coat of arms mounted on the wall above the arch. The archway leads to a courtyard or another part of the building. The bottom section shows a set of stone steps leading up to the archway.

7 August 2022

Dear Colleagues,

On behalf of the ISGAP Team, it is with great pleasure that I am writing to welcome you to the ISGAP-Oxford Summer Institute for Curriculum Development in Critical Antisemitism Studies, to be held at Pembroke College, Oxford, beginning Sunday 7 August, to Friday 19 August, 2021.

I am certain given your qualifications, experience and commitment to understanding and combating antisemitism and all forms of hate, and to scholarship itself, that you will add much to the program. The success of the Summer Institute is dependent on the contributions you and our colleagues will bring to this timely gathering.

I am optimistic that the ISGAP-Oxford Summer Institute will continue to make inroads into creating a "space" within academia for the study of critical contemporary antisemitism as a new academic discipline. In effect, we are beginning to break a taboo and the silence.

Through our groundbreaking program, we are developing a formal and informal network of scholars committed to this goal. We are committed to ensuring that more professors teach courses in contemporary critical antisemitism studies, and that students will engage this subject matter, and join our efforts.

Given these tumultuous times and the explosion of antisemitism these last few months, leading to a rise of antisemitism globally, racism, and other forms of prejudice, our work and meeting is all the more vital.

Your engagement and efforts are welcome. In fact, we hope you will become ambassadors for these vital and timely efforts.

Looking forward to seeing you in Oxford.

Sincerely,

With much appreciation and warmest regards,

Sincerely,

Dr. Charles Asher Small (D. Phil.
Oxon.) Executive Director, ISGAP
Director, ISGAP-Woolf Institute Fellowship Training Programme on Critical Antisemitism
Studies, Discrimination and Human Rights, Cambridge, U.K.

Yehuda Barlev

yehudah@barlev.co.il

Yehudah worked for various enforcement agencies in Israel and out of Israel, in wide issues of investigative audits (i.e., forensic accounting) of white-collar offences and corruption prevention on a national scale in various countries and in civil disputes. Among his substantial projects were: the recovery of the properties of Holocaust victims on behalf of the Knesset's investigation commission and later also for the Governmental Company for Locating and Recovery of Holocaust Victims' Properties, investigation of the fraud and collapse of the "Commerce Bank", delicate projects for governments. Yehudah lectures in various academic institutions in Israeli and international conventions on Investigative Auditing issues, economic crime, corruption, money laundering and terror financing, and also to: government officials, litigators, accountants, bankers, risk and money laundering compliance officers and law enforcement officers. Yehudah appears occasionally in Courts as an expert witness on Investigative Auditing issues (prevention, tracing and quantification of corruption, fraud, money laundering and terror finance).

He is a fellow of the London Centre for the Study of Contemporary Antisemitism.

Dr. Ansel Brown

anselbrown@gmail.com

As a recurrent lecturer at ISGAP, Dr. Brown will focus on topics raised by the students and guests more recently. As seen in this years' and last years' Summer-Oxford Institutes, there were questions about defining the differences between antisemitic anti-Zionism on one hand, and legitimate criticism of some of Israel's policies, on the other. There were also questions about alternative emerging Jewish organisations that are very critical of Israel, and how they fit into this spectrum. Dr. Brown will be crafting, with the hope of publication in an ISGAP series, a description and analysis of these questions, in addition to other materials in his paper: "Antisemitism and Anti-Zionism in Contemporary Social Organizations."

Aliza Landau

Aliza Landau was born in 1938 in Lodz, Poland. Her family - parents, Melech and Ruth Goldman, and brother Rishek, resided in Ruda Pabianicka, a suburb of the city. After the Germans entered Poland, her parents decided that Aliza's father would go into hiding. Aliza, her mother and brother were sent to the Lodz Ghetto, but were able to escape and join her father shortly afterwards. This marked the beginning of four years of wandering across Poland for the family, hiding in different locations, assisted by Polish peasants. The family was almost caught several times, and at one point was forced to escape to a nearby forest. After several days without food, her mother left the forest in search of sustenance but did not return. Aliza's brother died of starvation and she and her father were found by a German patrol. They were taken, together with several other people, to a makeshift killing pit. Her father was killed but Aliza survived unharmed. She waited for the night to come, crawled out of the pit and escaped to a nearby village. She was six years old. In the village she was taken in by a Ukrainian couple who took care of her until the region was liberated. Her mother, who had also survived in hiding after being severely injured, was able to find her after the war had ended. They moved to Israel in 1948. Aliza married Yossi Landau and had three children. She worked as a kindergarten teacher. Today she lectures on the subject of the Holocaust and accompanies Israel Police and security forces delegations as well as Israeli high-schools to Poland.

Dr. Dyanne Martin

dyanne.martin@wheaton.edu

Dyanne K. Martin, Ph.D., is a native of Jamaica, a country in which the joining of peoples of differing ethnic ancestries has provided her with a unique cultural perspective on issues of race. Her multicultural background fosters her deep interest in diasporic literatures across the Americas, with an emphasis on Caribbean literature. She examines overlooked spaces of healing and racial reconciliation in ethnic studies and conflicts. Her areas of scholarship also include Holocaust studies, classical and visual rhetoric, and semiotics. Her publications address notions of voice in slave narratives, immigrant experiences in Caribbean literature, and identity performance in both Jewish and black communities. Dr. Martin is an assistant professor of English at Wheaton College, where she teaches Holocaust Literature, among other courses.

Dr. Christine Maxwell

cmax.phd@gmail.com

Emerging technologies can inspire new ways of thinking and the posing of different questions within Holocaust Studies (Maxwell 2018). My recent doctoral research (Maxwell 2021) presented three case studies that show how deeper knowledge and broader understanding can lead to a new relevancy for Holocaust literature. For example, the authors of The Big Lie: The Protocols of the Elders of Zion (2003) discovered a new way of refuting The Protocols of the Elders of Zion (1933 English translation). Based on my experience at the 2021 ISGAP Summer Institute for Curriculum Development in Critical Antisemitism Studies, I took Jacobs' and Weitzman's refutation of The Protocols to a 'next level' by further analyzing the key themes identified. My resultant course, Following Protocol, is based on eight topics (Education, Finance, Human Rights, Politics, Practice/Other, Propaganda, Race/Ethnicity, and Religion) that are equally relevant to today's individuals and societies. Similarly, I also took a quantitative approach to examining this plagiarized and mis-represented masterpiece of propaganda that continues to promote and encourage antisemitic beliefs and actions around the world.

Growing up in a non-democratic country under a military government, she decided to focus her efforts on education about her values of Democracy, Equality, Zionism and Holocaust Remembrance. These values are the main focus of her research. She hopes to pass them onto the next generation of teachers in Israel. Over the past 20 years she served as a Council Person and a Representative Director in many of the largest Public companies in Israel such as: National Electric Company, Israeli Broadcast Corporation and different NGOs. During the previous year, she was appointed as a Representative Director in the Israeli Association of Community Centers and as the Head of the Accountability Commission. Avital is also a volunteer police officer in the Israeli gendarmery and used to participate in an active protection of settlements in the Galilee.

Dr. Tyran Laws

tyran.laws@gmail.com

Dr. Tyran Laws is a scholar-pastor whose contextual interests are an integral part of the American urban apologist movement. In 2016, he wrote a book entitled, The Round Table: A Christian's Conversation with Marginal Beliefs Affecting the Black Church Experience (2016) with a minor dialogue with the Black Hebrew Israelites (and other Black Religious Identity groups). He serves as the senior pastor of the Christian Fellowship Missionary Baptist Church (West Pullman neighbourhood of Chicago) and has over 20 years of ministry experience. He is also a recent Ph.D. graduate in New Testament Biblical Studies from Wheaton College. His dissertation project intersects with messianism within Gospel studies and Second Temple Judaism.

These points of reference, in Tyran's opinion, create a unique opportunity to explore the intersection between the dogma of the Hebrew-Israelites, Black Nationalism, and antisemitism.

Lev is the co-author (with Jonathan Fox) of Why Do People Discriminate Jews?, an innovative and ground-breaking book published by Oxford University Press in 2021 that combines traditional theories on antisemitism with empirical evidence from 76 countries to explain the reasons that drive discrimination against Jews. Lev is an interdisciplinary researcher that studies antisemitism alongside cyber-related topics like international cyber policies and anonymous communications. Lev is frequently invited to lecture about his study of racism and extremism on the Dark Web. Lev is the recipient of the 2019 Robert Wistrich annual award from the Vidal Sassoon International Center for the Study of Antisemitism (SICSA) and the recipient of the honorary award from the Association of Civil-Military Studies in Israel for his research about the Dark Web.

Dr. Pamela J. Walker

PamelaWalker@cunet.carleton.ca

Dr. Pamela J. Walker is a professor of history at Carleton University, Ottawa Canada. She received her PhD from Rutgers University. Pamela is also a historian of modern British history, and women's and gender history. She is very active in the Reacting to the Past Consortium which promotes the use of games to teach history. In 2019, Pamela was awarded the Brilliancy Prize for innovative teaching. Pamela is the author of Pulling the Devil's Kingdom Down: The Salvation Army in Victorian Britain (University of California Press). She is currently working on a project about British missionaries that includes the missions to the Jewish people of Britain. This required her to think about the distinctive ways antisemitism was expressed in Protestant missions. These questions brought her to a wider study of antisemitism. At the same time, Pamela was increasingly faced with antisemitic ideas among her students that confounded her as a professor of history. Though we are all witnesses to the rise of antisemitism now, neither her university's curriculum nor its policies and practices are yet adept at addressing the complexity of this problem. Her colleague, Deidre Butler, and Pamela intend to combat this problem with their new undergraduate course that will take an interdisciplinary perspective on antisemitism. Pamela is also studying Hebrew with an ulpan in Jerusalem and enjoys practising her Hebrew with others.

Harry Saul Markham

markhamharry@googlemail.com

Harry Saul Markham is an undergraduate student at University College London (UCL), reading History and Jewish Studies. He is also on the Advisory Board of Academics for Academic Freedom. He has written for various publications, exploring a range of subjects, including free-speech, Islamism, and antisemitism. He frequently gives talks to a variety of audiences, where he delights in disrupting the orthodoxies of our age. Harry has also been active in campaigning for the Social Democratic Party, and for human-rights around the world. Currently, as well as preparing for his year abroad at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, he is working on a book exploring multiculturalism, antisemitism and the rise of populism within Western-Europe. He is the former National Director of Herut UK, former President of the UCL Friends of Israel Society, and a former Critical Thinking Fellow at the Ayaan Hirsi Ali Foundation. Above all, aside from causing the odd bit of broigus and his eccentric fashion sense, he is, as his mother frequently tells him, “a nice Jewish boychick.”

Meredith Mollohan

Meredith Mollohan is a research associate at an American Jewish think tank. In this capacity, she arranged a roundtable discussion on Antisemitism in cooperation with the UK Parliament, as part of the International Ministerial Conference on Freedom of Religion or Belief. She serves as the Coordinator of the International Religious Freedom Secretariat’s Global Campaign against Antisemitism. After studying art crime and cultural heritage protection in Italy, she is now completing a postgraduate certificate on the subject. She will pursue a graduate degree next year. Beyond Jew-hatred, her research interests include risk analysis, global security, assaults on cultural heritage in conflict and genocide, and violence against women in the same contexts. Her most recent volunteer work includes Holocaust education, speaking engagements on women’s rights, and public advocacy on behalf of Afghanistan’s Hazara people.

Ben Rouda

bcrouda@gmail.com

Ben Rouda recently completed a course of study in Middle Eastern Studies and Psychology at Tel Aviv University, where he earned a BA with high honours. During his studies, he specialised in group dynamic psychology, taking a special interest in intergroup conflict and the psychological roots of racism and bigotry. He is currently writing his thesis paper, developing a new model of conflict and group relations based on the theory of status threat. He has previously authored several works on the origins of the incel movement and its ideological links to racism, antisemitism, and the alt-right. While in university, Ben led a student protest movement and worked to establish a representative organisation for international students. As part of these efforts, he went to work at the Student Union of Tel Aviv University as the Coordinator of International Affairs. Following graduation, Ben is still working for unionisation efforts and advocates for student rights and representation. He hopes to use his university education and experience with the ISGAP to work to promote unionisation and public service reform.

Mitchell Stein

mitchellstein7@gmail.com

Mitchell Stein is an undergraduate student at Concordia University in Montreal, Canada, pursuing a Bachelor of Arts in Communication and Media Studies, with a Minor in Israel Studies. Mitchell also serves as an Undergraduate Research Assistant at the Azrieli Institute for Israel Studies at Concordia University, and previously completed a study-abroad at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, studying topics in Middle Eastern History and Israeli Politics. Following his graduation, Mitchell hopes to pursue both a creative and academic career within the museum industry.

Samantha Wampold

swampold23@gmail.com

Samantha Wampold is an undergraduate student at the University of Washington. She is majoring in Global and Regional Studies with a concentration in the Middle East and hopes to minor in Modern Hebrew. This past semester, Samantha was given the opportunity to study abroad through a partnership with Tel Aviv University. Samantha studied Hebrew every day and gained an unhealthy adoration for shawarma in a laffa. At both universities, Samantha served as a fellow for CameraOnCampus, an organisation that assists students in combating misinformation in the media and on-campus that pertains to Israel. After her final year in Seattle, Samantha hopes to attend graduate school in a course related to Modern Middle Eastern Studies or Counterterrorism.

Chelsea Mallory Wasserman

chelsea.wasserman@isgap.org

Chelsea Wasserman is a Research and Policy Associate at the Institute for the Global Study of Antisemitism and Policy (ISGAP). Her main duties involve researching, writing academic works for publication, and advising ISGAP about policy recommendations. Chelsea received a master's degree in Public Policy, Conflict Resolution and Mediation and a certification in international mediation acknowledged by UNESCO through Tel Aviv University (2021). She also completed an Honours undergraduate degree from Western University in Social Justice and Peace Studies (2020). In undergrad, Chelsea worked as an intern in a restorative justice program which functioned as a preventative approach to family violence at an Indigenous rights organisation (Atlohse Family Healing Centre). She also fundraised and built homes for low-income families through Habitat for Humanity and worked as a National Organizer in human rights advocacy. During her time in Israel, Chelsea co-founded an organisation called Amplify Unity and was the Director of Business Development and Partnerships. Amplify Unity put together successful facilitated Public Forums with experts in the field discussing misinformation and disinformation about the Israeli-Palestinian conflict as it relates to the international security threats posed by a related outgrowth of global xenophobia, antisemitism, and anti-Muslim bigotry. Chelsea and her team used this material as part of their research process to write policy papers. Concurrently, she worked as a research intern conducting a study on Palestinian peacebuilders' unmet organisation needs for Alliance for Middle East Peace, a grassroots peace-building organization operating in the region of Israel and the Palestinian territories. Upon her return to Canada, Chelsea worked in Jewish advocacy (Friends of Simon Wiesenthal Centre), and then for ISGAP in policy and research development.

Asher Wexler

awexler@unc.edu

Asher Wexler is an undergraduate student at UNC-Chapel Hill (Class of 2025) where he is a recipient of the Morehead Cain Scholarship and studies international relations, environmental politics, Arabic, and music. In 2020, Asher attended the Tikvah Institute's Maimonides Scholars Summer Program, exploring the philosophical foundations of Jewish statehood, the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, and the American ideal of religious freedom. At Chapel Hill, Asher has continued to engage issues related to antisemitism and anti-Zionism, especially as they manifest in the academic arena on campus. He is increasingly interested in exploring the intersection of Judaism, Israel, and intellectual pluralism as confined by liberal arts curriculum. This coming year, Asher will study climate and Middle East peace policy at the Arava Institute for Environmental Studies and Arabic in Amman, Jordan. Asher is a multi-instrumentalist and enjoys soccer, surfing, and backpacking. He is an older brother to three younger siblings - his most challenging and rewarding enterprise.

Breakout Groups Sessions

Breakout sessions will be led by qualified Scholars in Residence through discussion groups sessions from 6:15 – 7:00 P.M., on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday.

Upon her return to Canada, Chelsea worked in Jewish advocacy (Friends of Simon Wiesenthal Centre), and then for ISGAP in policy and research.

Dr. Chloe Pinto

cyp23@cam.ac.uk

Chloe Pinto is an ISGAP Visiting Scholar in Critical Antisemitism Studies, Discrimination and Human Rights at the Woolf Institute. Her work investigates the interplay between textual antisemitism and literary theory, researching how the plasticity of anti-Jewish prejudice informs and infects the meaning of words. Chloe has recently earned her doctorate in English (Criticism and Culture) at Pembroke College, University of Cambridge. Her doctoral research focused on the relationship between artwork and antisemitism in Ezra Pound's work and thought, and lies at the intersection between the politics of exclusion and the interplay between text, ideology and image. She previously co-convoked Cambridge's Theory, Criticism and Culture seminar series and currently supervises undergraduate and postgraduate work on poetry, film and literary theory.

Dr. Lev Topor

lev-topor@hotmail.com

Dr. Lev Topor is currently an ISGAP Visiting Scholar at the Woolf Institute where he focuses on Critical Antisemitism Studies, Discrimination and Human Rights, a research programme led by The Institute for the Study of Global Antisemitism and Policy (ISGAP). Lev Topor is also a Senior Research Fellow at the Center for Cyber Law and Policy (CCLP) in the University of Haifa and a visiting Research Fellow at Yad Vashem in Jerusalem (Summer 2022). Lev is the co-author (with Jonathan Fox) of Why Do People Discriminate Jews?, an innovative and ground-breaking book published by Oxford University Press in 2021 that combines traditional theories on antisemitism with empirical evidence from 76 countries to explain the reasons that drive discrimination against Jews. Lev is an interdisciplinary researcher that studies antisemitism alongside cyber-related topics like international cyber policies and anonymous communications.
